Broadcasting/Cable

Yearbook 1981

The 1981 BROADCASTING/CABLE YEARBOOK shares with its predecessors the distinction of being the most comprehensive directory to the business of broadcasting. It continues to improve on its past publications, by offering new features and refinements of established ones. To acquaint YEARBOOK readers with what they can expect to find between these covers, and to assist in locating information, the editors offer this general description of the seven major sections, Broadcasting in General, Television, Radio, Advertising and Programing, Engineering and Equipment, Professional Services and Associations, and Cable.

Section A—"Broadcasting in General," begins Section A with the history and evolution of the broadcasting media. The "Short Course in Broadcasting" (A-2) provides a capsulized summary of the industry. A section on the Federal Communications Commission follows with an extract of its principal rules, an organization chart of the FCC on page A-8, and a guide to station application procedure. A directory of government agencies and committees of interest to the broadcasting industry begins on page A-34, followed by a list of state Cable regulatory agencies. The Group Ownership directory lists individuals and companies with multiple station holdings beginning on page A-36, followed by Newspaper/Magazine Crossownership and Broadcasters with Cable interests. This section concludes with a tabular record of station trading since 1954 on page A-66.

Section B—This is the Television section of the YEARBOOK. The first part, "The Television Marketplace," describes the commercial aspects of the medium, and has as its primary feature the "ADI Market Atlas," a 77-page section showing each of the 214 ADI's (Areas of Dominant Influence) according to Arbitron Television. It is complete with coverage maps, and other important market rankings. The second part, "The Facilities of Television," begins with detailed directories of TV stations with cross-references to the appropriate ADI's. Among the other features of this section are lists of stations by call letters and channels, and a complete history of TV station transfers. The section closes with a list of pending TV station applications.

Section C—The Radio section of the YEARBOOK begins with the directory of AM and FM stations in the United States followed by stations in U.S. territories, Canada, Mexico and the Caribbean. Next, a directory lists all counties of license with either county or market population figures. Cross-reference lists of AM and FM stations by call letters and frequencies for both the U.S. and Canada follow this directory. Finally, the section concludes with the table of FM assignments.

Section D—This section is in three parts. The first, "Broadcast Advertising," presents directories of advertising agencies, station representatives, media buying/planning services and the NAB TV and Radio Codes. The second part, "Networks & Programing," which begins on page 32 contains the major network directories with radio and TV affiliates; a section on public broadcasting; directories of program and commercial producers for radio and TV, distributors and production services; regional radio and TV networks and news services. Other program-related material includes the sections on pay cable services, music licensing groups, closed circuit TV, major awards, and radio stations listed according to their formats and special programing. The third, "Broadcast Summaries," consists of tables that provide information on the growth of broadcasting, radio and TV billing & set sales and radio and TV audiences.

Section E—This, the "Equipment & Engineering" section, begins with a list of equipment manufacturers and distributors, and continues with listings of frequency measuring services, automated-channel suppliers, broadcast automation systems, and a directory of companies providing mobile production services. The next section on common carriers including land line (AT&T), microwave & multipoint distribution services is followed by directories of satellite owners and operators, satellite resale and common carriers, and programers and networks using satellites. The last part begins on page 47 with the 1981 Buyers Guide, the yellow pages, a commercial directory to both equipment and broadcast services.

Section F—is divided into four parts—Professional Services, Associations, Broadcast Education, and International. Part one provides listings of brokers and consultants, station financing firms, research services, engineering consultants, law firms and attorneys in communications law, public relations and employment services, and talent agents. Part two, Associations, begins with the National Association of Broadcasters listing on page F-31. Other groups listed include trade organizations, professional associations and societies, and unions. Broadcast Education, part three, opens on page F-54 with broadcasting schools, college and universities and books. The section entitled International concludes this section with three directories, world radio and television, international producers, and international equipment manufacturers.

Section G—The Cable section of the YEARBOOK contains detailed information on Cable systems throughout the United States and Canada. The Cable listings provide the system name, address, and phone number; area served; type of TV market; statistical data; channel usage; TV stations carried; information about pay cable and other types of programing; and ownership. A "Short Course in Cable" and descriptions of regulations affecting the cable industry open the section. Also found in this section is a directory of Multiple System Operators (MSO's) in the U.S. and Canada which begins on page G-347.

At the top of the first page of each section is a table of contents. Through these and the alphabetized editorial index that begins on the next page, the editors hope that readers will quickly find their way to the information they most need to know about broadcasting.

of Commerce authority to inspect radio stations, to examine and license radio operators, and to assign radio call signs.

Much of the early effort of the Federal Radio Commission was required to straighten out the confusion in the broadcast band. It was impossible to accommodate the 732 broadcast stations then operating. New regulations caused about 150 of them to surrender their licenses.

Communications Act of 1934

At the request of President Roosevelt, the Secretary of Commerce in 1933 appointed an interdepartmental committee to study electronic communications. The committee recommended that Congress establish a single agency to regulate all interstate and foreign communication by wire and radio, including telegraph, telephone and broadcast. The Communications Act of 1934 created the Federal Communications Commission for this unified regulation. This is the statute under which the FCC operates and which it enforces. Several of its provisions were taken from the earlier Radio Act.

Federal Communications Commission

The FCC began operating on July 11, 1934, as an independent federal agency headed by seven commissioners, who are appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate.

FCC Broadcast Regulation

One of the FCC's major activities is the regulation of broadcasting. This has three phases.

The first is the allocation of space in the radio frequency spectrum to the broadcast services and to many nonbroadcast services which also must be accommodated. In view of the tremendously increased use of radio technology in recent decades, the competing demands for frequencies are among the commission's most pressing problems. Fortunately, as technology has advanced, frequencies higher and higher in the spectrum have become usable. Apart from the frequencies used for broadcasting, frequencies in other portions of the spectrum are allocated for "broadcast auxiliary" use by remote pickup and other transmitters auxiliary to main broadcast stations (see Auxiliary Broadcast Services).

The second phase of regulation is the assignment of stations in each service within the allocated frequency bands, with specific location, frequency and power. The chief consideration, although by no means the only one, is to avoid interference with other stations on the same channel (frequency) or channels adjacent in the spectrum. If his application is granted, an applicant for a new station or for changed facilities receives a construction permit. Later, when the station is built and it is capable of operating as proposed, a license to operate is issued.

The third phase is regulation of existing stations: inspection to see that stations are operating in accordance with FCC rules and technical provisions of their authorizations, modifying the authorizations when necessary, assigning station call letters, licensing transmitter operators, processing requests to assign the station license to another party or transfer control of the licensee corporation, and processing applications for renewal of license. At renewal time the commission reviews the station's record to see if it is operating in the public interest.

The Nature of American Broadcasting

Although educational and other noncommercial stations share the airwaves, the American broadcasting system for the most part is a commercial system. In this respect it is supported by revenues from those who advertise goods or services to the audience. Advertising messages are presented as commercial "spot announcements" before, during, and after programs, or as a part of "sponsored" programs.

Broadcast stations are licensed to serve the public interest, convenience and necessity. Because radio channels are limited and are part of the public domain, it is important to entrust them to licensees with a sense of public responsibility. By law, each license must contain a statement that the licensee does not have any right to operate the station or use the frequency beyond the term of license. The maximum term of license is three years.

Under requirements of the Communications Act, applicants must be legally, technically and financially qualified, and they must show that their proposed

A short course in broadcasting □ 1981

There were 8,933 radio stations operating in the United States at the end of 1980. Of these, 4,575 were commercial AM's, 3,272 were commercial FM's and 1,086 were noncommercial FM's. There were 1,020 operating television stations: 519 commercial VHF's, 233 commercial UHF's, 106 noncommercial VHF's and 162 noncommercial UHF's. Most commercial TV's are network affiliated; approximately 150 operate as independents.

No single entity may own more than seven stations in each service (AM, FM or TV). In TV, no more than five may be VHF. No owner may have two stations of the same service in the same community. No owner of three VHF's in the top 50 markets may purchase other VHF's in the top 50 without a showing of compelling public interest. Newspaper owners may no longer purchase broadcast properties in the same market, nor may radio station owners acquire TV stations there, nor TV owners radio outlets. TV stations may no longer acquire cable TV franchises in the same city, and networks may not own cable systems at all.

In 1979, the last year for which official FCC figures are available, commercial broadcasting had total revenues of approximately $10.6 billion. Profits were $1.9 billion. Television accounted for $7.9 billion (74.5%) of revenues and $1.7 billion (89.5%) of profits; radio, for approximately $2.7 billion (25.5%) and $241 million (10.5%). Public broadcasting had a 1979 income of $603.5 million—27% from the federal government.

There are more than 77 million U.S. homes (98% of all homes) with television sets, about 50% of which have more than one set. About 66 million sets are color. It is estimated that about 95% of TV homes can receive UHF signals, and that about 19% are linked with cable systems, according to Arbitron Television. There are an estimated 456 million radio sets in the U.S., 333 million (73%) of them in homes and 123 million (27%) out of homes.

The average American home watches TV for six hours and 36 minutes a day, according to A.C. Nielsen statistics. And the latest study by The Roper Organization (commissioned by the Television Information Office) shows that 67% of the U.S. public turns to TV as the source of most of its news, and that 47% ranks it as the most believable news source.

The average 30-second prime-time network television announcement now costs $75,000 (spots on a top-rated series cost $150,000; low-rated spots average about $45,000). An estimated 104 million people watched the 1981 Super Bowl telecast. Sixty-second announcements during that event cost $550,000. Thirty-second announcements on individual TV stations range from $15,000 in top-rated specials in major markets to as low as $10 in the second-hundred markets. Radio spots cost from $300 or more in major markets to less than a dollar in small towns.

In 1945, as part of an extensive revision of frequency allocations, the commission reserved 20 FM channels between 88 and 92 mhz for noncommercial educational FM stations. This part of the FM band is contiguous to the commercial portion, and FM receivers can tune both noncommercial and commercial stations. Since then, the number of noncommercial educational FM stations has grown slowly but steadily.

In 1948 the commission authorized 10 w operation on educational FM channels. With such low power equipment, easily installed and operated, schools may broadcast to a limited area of two to five miles for an outlay of a few thousand dollars. High power equipment may be added when desired. In 1951, as a further aid, the commission authorized remote control operation of low power educational stations. Approximately half of all educational FM stations use power of 10 w.

Educational FM stations traditionally have been assigned on an individual-application "demand" basis, as AM stations are assigned. To permit planned development of the 20 reserved channels, it is proposed to adopt a table of assignments like that adopted in 1963 for commercial FM channels to allocate specific frequencies to communities.

Stations in the educational FM service are licensed principally to school systems, colleges and universities for student-teacher programs as well as for public education and information.

TV Educational Stations.—The commission allocated TV facilities for noncommercial educational use after a lengthy study in the general television proceedings (see Broadcast). It determined that "the need for noncommercial educational stations has been amply demonstrated," that it would take longer for the educational service to be developed than for the commercial service, and that special channels should be reserved. Consequently, in 1952, channel assignments were made to 242 communities exclusively for noncommercial educational stations. Forty-six of these were made to primary educational centers. Of the total 242 channels, 80 were VHF and 162 UHF. There have been more assignments since. In 1966 a revised table of channel assignments was adopted for UHF, containing many more educational assignments than before. The new table contains altogether over 615 educational TV assignments in the mainland states, more than a third of all channel assignments.

The first educational TV station to go on the air was KUHT Houston on May 25, 1953. The first state educational TV network was established in Alabama on April 28, 1955.

The commission expects educational TV licensees to make their station facilities available to other local educational institutions, since such assignments are made to serve the educational and cultural needs of the community. Except in particular cases, educational TV eligibility is not extended to municipal authorities in places where an independent educational authority, such as board of education, is established. Noncommercial educational stations are not required to broadcast a specific minimum number of hours, but educational and commercial TV stations are subject to the same service requirements, such as station separation, antenna height and power.

'A 1962 law enabled the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to make matching federal grants of money to build educational TV stations, and a 1967 law extended these benefits to educational radio.

As an aid to educational TV, the commission in 1963 established the Instructional Television Fixed Service, a nonbroadcast service on considerably higher frequencies (2500-2690 mhz) than the broadcast service. An ITFS station at a central point such as a school district headquarters can transmit as many as four programs simultaneously to area schools, where special receivers pick up the programs. Simultaneous transmission capability eases scheduling programs for in-school educational TV, and the ITFS service frees broadcast educational TV for more general programing.

(Many schools have closed-circuit TV systems to link classrooms for instruction, but this is by cable, not broadcast, and it is not regulated by the commission.)

Several colleges, universities and community groups hold TV authorizations on channels not reserved for education, and they operate either on a profit or nonprofit basis.

Other Broadcast Activity

International Broadcast.— Under international agreement, certain high-frequency bands are allocated for broadcast between nations.

Authorizations for non-government international broadcast stations in the United States are issued by the FCC. Only five of these international stations are now authorized. A single station uses a number of frequencies between 5950 and 26100 khz, and it may need more than one transmitter because of seasonal considerations and other factors in broadcasting different programs simultaneously to different parts of the world. Three stations are now operating, one is scheduled to go on the air in 1981 and another in 1982. The minimum power for these stations, sometimes known as short-wave stations, is 50 kw.

During World War II, international broadcast stations in the United States were taken over temporarily by the Office of War Information and the Office of Inter-American Affairs of the Department of State, which programed them in the interest of the war effort.

Under the peacetime program of the Department of State, the International Communications Agency broadcasts daily in many languages to other parts of the world through the Voice of America. VOA stations are not licensed or regulated by the FCC. There are about 30 VOA transmitters in the United States and about 70 located in foreign countries.

Broadcast Relay by Satellite.— The first live trans-Atlantic telecast by satellite was relayed by Telstar I on July 10, 1962. The picture was of the American flag fluttering in front of the sending station at Andover, Me. More panoramic telecasts, showing life in widely distant places, were exchanged between the U.S. and Europe 13 days later. Telstar I and other experimental satellites were operated by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, which continues to handle the rocket launching of privately operated communication satellites as well as some satellites in government communication and space programs.

The Communications Satellite Act of 1962 provided for the U.S. portion of a global system to be operated by a private corporation, the Communications Satellite Corp., subject to federal regulations. Comsat is owned partly by common carriers and partly by the general public. Early Bird (INTELSAT I) on April 2, 1965, became the first commercial satellite to be put in orbit by Comsat and its foreign partners in the International Telecommunications Satellite Consortium. During the following year, some 80 hours of television were transmitted between the U.S. and Europe. Early Bird has since been replaced and retired.

When INTELSAT II (flight 2) went up over the Pacific on Jan. 11, 1967, satellite communication was established between the U.S. mainland and Hawaii, making live network TV transmission available there for the first time. Still, television makes up only a small part of the traffic on communication satellites around the world. Telephone and teletype communications, including data transmissions, dominate the loads.

Auxiliary Broadcast Services.— Broadcasters take portable or mobile transmitters to the scene of events to relay aural programs back to the station for on-the-spot coverage of sporting events, parades, conventions, fairs, disasters, and other newsworthy events. These remote-broadcast pickup stations use frequencies in the 26, 153, and 450 mhz portions of the spectrum.

TV stations also use small portable transmitters operating in the 2, 7, and 13 ghz-per-second (microwave) portions of the spectrum for visual coverage of out-of-studio events.

Stations may also use transmitters to send TV and aural programs from the studio to the transmitter (studio-transmitter links) and to relay programs between broadcast stations (intercity relay stations). Aural studio-transmitter links and intercity relay stations operate in the 950 mhz portion of the spectrum and TV studio-transmitter links and intercity relay stations in the 2, 7, and 13 ghz portions.

Experimental Broadcast.—Experimental broadcast stations test new techniques and develop broadcast equipment. Information obtained helps the industry to evolve and provides the commission with information about new developments. All the broadcast services (AM, FM, TV,) had their origins in experimental stations, as did UHF television, color television and subscription television.

Note: Dollar volume figures represent total considerations reported for all transactions, with the exception of minority-interest transfers in which control of the licensee did not change hands. All sales have been approved by the FCC. Also, prior to 1978, a combined AM-FM facility was counted as one station in computing the total number of stations traded.

*Prior to 1971 figures represent total number of deals involving both radio and television stations.

Beginning in 1971, when the FCC's "one-to-a-customer" rule, prohibiting the sale of co-located TV and radio stations, became effective, figures represent the total number of separately located TV and radio stations that were sold in packages.

The TV Marketplace

The ADI Market Atlas

The Area of Dominant Influence is a geographic market design that defines each television market exclusive of the others, based on measurable viewing patterns. Each market's ADI consists of all counties in which the home market stations receive a preponderance of viewing, and every county in the U.S. (excluding Hawaii and part of Alaska) is allocated exclusively to only one ADI—there is no overlap. The estimated television households are therefore additive, and the total of all ADI's represents the total television households in the U.S.

The ADI is a standard market definition. As a television buying tool it is a geographic and demographic means for maximum efficiency. As a station tool it has numerous applications for more effective sales efforts, and for programing and promotion planning.

Following, in alphabetical order, are Arbitron Television's 214 ADI markets for 1980-81 with coverage maps for each and county-by-county breakouts of TV households. Other data included the market's stations, and their cities of license, channel numbers and network affiliations. (Networks in parentheses indicate secondary affiliations.)

Coverage maps show total survey areas in white, the ADI's themselves in light crosshatching, and Arbitron Metro Rating Areas in heavier crosshatching. The survey areas consist of all counties in which the home market stations are viewed to any significant extent, including via cable. (Note—The survey area figures are of 1979.) The Metro Areas, save for an occasional deviation caused by geographical or historical factors, conform to the U.S. Census Standard Metropolitan Statistical Areas.

Arbitron has also designated several "supplementary markets"—TV-station home counties where the stations of a different market receive the preponderance of viewing. Supplementary markets therefore do not meet Arbitron's criteria for having an ADI of their own; they are listed in this atlas next to the ADI of which they are a part. (Note—The survey area of a supplementary market usually differs from that of the neighboring ADI market.)

A complete list of the supplementary markets appears on page B-53, and a cross-reference list for cities in a multi-city ADI on B-77.

Fifty-nine Emmys in four years.

It's not the number of Emmys we're proud of, but what they stand for. . . our commitment to local programming. And the highest award of all is the one our viewers have given throughout the years in their loyalty to our news, public affairs and entertainment programming. That's why we say, we are New England . . . Channel 5 and you.

Data on each market is listed in the surrounding atlas adjacent to the ADI in which it falls. TV household estimates for supplementary markets are nonadditive, since these markets are composed of counties which are a part of other markets' ADI's.

TV Markets by Nielsen Marketing Research Territory

Nielsen Marketing Research territory groupings are another standard way of reporting sales data. The following table ranks TV markets within each Nielsen Territory. This provides a yardstick for determining the number of spot markets needed to achieve a given coverage of a territory. For example, if the national media are not delivering sufficient advertising weight in New England, the planner will find that three TV markets (Boston, Hartford and Providence) contain more than 80% of the New England territory households. Or, he can use the table to get a better idea of how and what TV markets are needed to cover all of New England. Data is from special Nielsen Station Index tabulation based on a September 1980 estimate.

How Network Delivery Varies by Market

National advertisers use spot television to increase network advertising weight in specific markets to achieve a predetermined level. These market goals are derived from the advertising budget and the market's share of the brand's projected sales. Thus, a spot schedule is usually indicated where a market has an unusually high brand-sales potential, or where the network weight delivered for the brand is below the national average used in planning, or both.

The first factor, market brand potential, varies by product and is difficult to generalize. The second factor, local-market network audiences, must be generalized because planning is based upon next season's anticipated network performance. The prevalence of network "package" buys, which tend to deliver average audience levels, supports the use of average data.

The following tabulation, chosen especially for the BROADCASTING Yearbook, shows Arbitron Television's Areas of Dominant Influence (ADI) in terms of percent of the total number of U.S. TV households. Also given, in like percentage terms, are the network audiences in each ADI market during prime-time hours. It is this market audience figure, when compared to the market's share of population, that indicates whether the network commitment will perform above or below the national plan average in that market.

The figures are based on Arbitron Television's May 1980 Network Program Group Analysis.

Radio Billings—1955-1979

Figures for the years 1955 through 1967 are net time sales by stations and networks after all frequency and promotional discounts but before deduction of commissions to agencies and representatives. Figures from 1969 on were computed under a new formula and represent total amounts paid by advertisers for the use of broadcast facilities. They include commissions paid to advertising agencies and representatives and payments for broadcast time and programs, materials, facilities and services supplied by broadcast stations and networks in connection with the sale of time. Figures are based on FCC data.

*Prior to 1971, data reflects factory sales by U.S. manufacturers plus those products imported directly by distributors or dealers for resale. All import statistics are based on average value as published by the U.S. Department of Commerce, which is F.O.B. and therefore excludes U.S. import duties, freight charged from the foreign country to the U.S. and insurance.

Television Billings—1955-1979

Figures for the years 1955 through 1967 are net time sales by stations and networks after all frequency and promotional discounts but before deduction of commissions to agencies and representatives. Figures for 1968 through 1979 were computed under a new formula and represent total amounts paid by advertisers for the use of broadcast facilities. They include commissions paid to advertising agencies and representatives and payments for broadcast time and programs, materials, facilities and services supplied by broadcast stations and networks in connection with the sale of time. Figures are based on FCC data.

Broadcasting Cable
Yearbook 1981

International

World Radio and Television

The following summarizes radio and television broadcasting around the world. Stations and transmitters used for international and armed forces programs are included. Transmitter counts for each country are for main transmitters and often include low power relays, repeaters, satellites and/or translators. Where current information is not available, radio set counts have been estimated by Broadcasting.

Note: Domestic radio stations in foreign countries often use shortwave and longwave frequencies, as well as the medium wave frequencies corresponding with the standard AM broadcast band in the U.S. Longwave (lw) frequencies below 500 khz are generally used in Europe, Africa, the Middle East, and Asiatic U.S.S.R. Medium wave (mw) frequencies are between 500 and 1600 khz and are used on all continents. Shortwave (sw) frequencies are between 1600 and 30,000 khz and are used for domestic broadcasting on all continents, especially in tropical areas. On long, medium, and shortwave, the mode of transmission is amplitude modulation (AM). Most foreign frequency modulation (FM) radio broadcasting is on the same frequencies as those used in the U.S., although some countries use a band between 60 and 88 mhz.

Unless shown as commercial (coml), government broadcasting activity identified below is without advertising. Some independent broadcasting organizations, such as the BBC, operate under statutory authority, and are so identified. Statutory, nongovernmental broadcasting may be supported by receiver license fees, advertising, subsidies, or a combination local station on the channel reserved for the programing of the more distant duplicating signal This provision averts the need for a "blacked out" channel that would otherwise result

Zones of Protection—Cable system community units located within fixed mileage zones (35 miles for stations licensed to top-100, or major, television markets and 55 miles for those licensed to smaller markets) of communities to which TV stations are licensed must provide nonduplication protection to those stations.

Translator Stations—These stations located within the predicted Grade B contour of their parent station are entitled to nonduplication protection against the duplicating network programing of stations more than 55 miles away from the cable community. In addition, translators licensed to a cable community need not be blacked our to protect other stations.

Notification—Television stations seeking nonduplication protection must submit their requests to cable systems at least six days before the broadcast of the program to be protected and are required to notify the system of last-minute schedule changes. The First Report and Order in Docket 19995 includes a sample notification form.

Program Overruns—The rules allow a one-hour "grace period" during which nonduplication protection need not be provided.

Same-Day Protection—Stations in the Mountain Time Zone are entitled only to simultaneous rather than same-day nonduplication protection. However a station may be granted more protection by the Commission upon a showing of need.

Significantly Viewed Signals—Cable systems are not required to delete the programing of any station that is significantly viewed, as defined for signal carriage purposes. Thus, the rules do not prohibit cable subscribers from obtaining signals commonly available off-the-air in the cable community. This change in the rules has been stayed, pending judicial review.

The syndicated program exclusivity rules require that a cable system serving a community in the first 50 major markets, upon receipt of notification, cease carrying syndicated programs from a distant signal during a pre-clearance period of one year from the date that they are sold for the first time as syndicated programs in the United States. And a cable system in any major market may not carry a syndicated program to which a commercial TV station, licensed to a designated community in the market, has exclusive rights. However, there are several exceptions to this prohibition for cable systems in one of the second 50 major markets.

When a program is deleted under the syndicated program exclusivity rules, a cable system may substitute programing, not otherwise subject to deletion, from any other television station.

Systems serving fewer than 1,000 subscribers per headend are exempt from these requirements.

Based on the conclusions of an inquiry (Docket 21284) into the economic relationships of cable and broadcasting, the FCC adopted in July 1980 a rulemaking eliminating all limits on the number of broadcast signals a cable system may carry and removed the protection afforded television stations against duplication of the syndicated programing for which they hold exhibition rights.

The rulemaking passed by a 4-3 commission vote, but was immediately challenged by Malrite Broadcasting in the Second Court of Appeals in New York. The court has stayed the FCC decision. Thus, the rules remain in effect until the resolution of the court challenge.

The rules that require that a cable system carry local broadcast signals are also being challenged in 1980. Turner Broadcasting Systems, a cable television programer, has petitioned the FCC to drop them.

The rules relating to service other than over-the-air broadcast involve channel capacity, access and origination cablecasting, and two-way communications. They apply to all systems having 3,500 or more subscribers per headend.

While the Commission encourages experimentation, the rules preclude local regulation on channel capacity, pay cable, and access channels, except government access channels. Franchising authorities may not require more access channels or more extensive two-way operation without specific Commission authorization. Any system serving fewer than 3,500 subscribers may voluntarily provide access channel space; if so, the system must comply with the FCC's operating rule requirements.

Due to possible confusion with broadcast signals, the FCC recommends that cable operators do not use broadcast call letters to identify cablecast channels. It issued a policy statement October 8, 1976, on problems that could arise from the lack of identification or the method of identifying cablecast channels.

State and local authorities may regulate cable transmissions of data and other nonvideo programing. As a result of the court decision, in NARU v. FCC, 533 F. 2d 601 (D.C. Cir. 1976), the FCC no longer regulates intrastate, two-way, point-to-point nonvideo cable transmissions.

New cable systems having 3,500 or more subscribers must provide a minimum potential capacity equal to 20 television broadcast channels. They also must provide the technical capability for nonvoice return, or two-way, communications. Systems that already possess 20-channel capacity are not required to rebuild to provide two-way channel capacity.

Systems in operation as of March 31, 1972, with less than 20-channel capacity and at least 3,500 subscribers are required to reconstruct by June 21, 1986, to comply with channel capacity requirements.

Since most existing systems have 12-channel capacity, and the Commission does not require a system to rebuild in order to provide additional "must carry" signals, many systems cannot carry all of the required local signals. This problem of "saturated" systems is under examination in a rulemaking proceeding (Docket 21472).

All systems with 3,500 or more subscribers, regardless of market, are required to provide up to four access channels (one each for public, education, government, and leased uses), only if they have sufficient activated channel capability to do so and there is demand for full-time use of the channels. Otherwise, they are required to provide at least one composite, or combined access, channel. No system is required to rebuild or add converters to provide access channels.

Cable operators are required to have equipment available for public use in the local production and presentation of nonautomated cablecast programs. They also must have rules for use of public and leased access channels on a first-come, nondiscriminatory basis and that prohibits advertising and lotteries on public and education access channels. The Commission recommends that rules for leased channel use prohibit lottery information, but they may allow advertising. On all except government access channels, the FCC requires that the local operating rules permit public inspection of a complete record of names and addresses of anyone requesting access time; the record must be maintained for two years. The Commission places no restrictions on the use of government access channels. Operating rules for public, educational, and leased access programing must be filed with the FCC within 90 days after the operator activates any such channels.

One public access channel must be made available for use without charge. However, cable operators may make reasonable charges for equipment, personnel, and production if the program is not live and is longer than five minutes. Channels for education and government access must be provided free for five years after they are first made available.

The rules prohibit operators from exercising any control over the content of access cablecast programing while at the same time they require operators to adopt their own rules prohibiting the cablecase of obscene or indecent material. A clarification adopted in 1976 emphasized that, in addition to having their own rules, cable operators were responsible for enforcing them.

The requirement that operators prohibit the cablecast of obscene or indecent material was challenged in American Civil Liberties Union v. FCC, No. 76-1695 (D.C. Cir., voluntarily remanded August 26, 1977), on the grounds that it was unconstitutional prior restraint on speech. Before the case was decided, the court, at the Commission's request, stayed the enforcement of the clarification to the extent that it unlawfully restrained the presentation of obscene or indecent matter on cable television and remanded it to the Commission. Thus, clearly the Commission cannot enforce that portion of the access rules at this time.

Less clear is the issue of whether or not the Commission has authority to impose any access requirements on cable operators. Although the rules remain in effect, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eighth Cir-

A short course in cable, 1981

There are 4,400 operating cable systems in the U.S., serving some 10,400 communities. Another 2,000 franchises are approved but not built. Pennsylvania has the most systems (342) and California the most subscribers (2.1 million). Operating systems currently reach about 17.2 million subscribers, perhaps over 48 million people—22% of the nation's TV households. The largest (Cox Cable in San Diego) has about 188,880 subscribers. Some have fewer than 100. Teleprompter is the largest multiple system operator (MSO), with more than 1,290,717 subscribers. Industry revenues last year totaled approximately $2.3 billion. Most systems offer 12 channels. Systems constructed after March 1972 must have a minimum 20-channel capacity. The average monthly fee is $8.50, and the average pay subscriber fee is $10 per month. Costs of laying cable range from $8,000 per mile in rural areas to $12,000 in urban areas and up to $80,000 where underground cable is required. An estimated 3,080 systems originate programing in their own studios, the average for 23 hours weekly. Equipment costs are as low as $30,000 for a small black and white operation and $200,000 for a color studio. Over 609 systems (14% of all systems) accept advertising on their local origination channels, with rates from $1 to $200 per 30-second spot. Most cable systems derive less than 5% of their gross revenues from advertising. Pay cable is on approximately 2,500 systems and reaches 5 million subscribers in 50 states. Most pay cable operators are reporting close to 25.3 penetration of their subscriber count. Home Box Office Inc. initiated the first national satellite interconnected pay network Sept. 30, 1975, using transponder time leased on the Satcom satellite. Aside from contracting for packaged pay programs, like HBO, cable operators can lease a channel to a pay program operator or secure their own programing directly from a supplier. Over 33% of all cable systems have ties with broadcast interests, almost 18% with program producers and approximately 13% with newspapers. Many systems have multiple cross-ownership ties.

Cable TV Systems in the United States and Canada

Key to the Listings

Listed in this directory are all the cable television systems and franchise holders in the United States and Canada. Each is listed under the principal community of service, by state or province.

Shown to the right is a sample listing, with explanation of information keyed to the boldface numbers.

(1) Name of system, local address, zip code and telephone.

(2) Personnel and attorney.

(3) Area served: Springfield is the principal community; the system also serves nearby Paris borough and Twillham township.

(4) County in which the service area is located.

(5) Type of TV market. According to FCC rules a CATV system is within a TV market if any part of the system falls within 35 miles of a commercial TV city-of-license. There are three locational categories: Top-100 markets; "smaller TV markets," i.e. any community with a commercial TV station not in the top 100; and, third, locations outside all TV markets. Systems outside a market may still be required to offer nonduplication protection if they fall within 55 miles of a city-of license.

(6) Statistical data: total number of subscribers; homes passed by the system; total homes in the communities served (where this figure is not available, population is given); date the system began; length of plant; cost to the subscriber for installation and monthly service; and fee the community levies on the cable company (usually a percentage of gross revenue). In states with an across-the-board fee, the fee appears under the state heading.

(7) Summary of system, showing number of channels used for each service. Total capacity is that of the distribution system. Pan-State has 27 channels. Twelve are used for TV carriage; one for pay cable (which carries high-quality programing at an additional charge); two for automated services, such as weather and news data; four for public access programing; two for any other programing originated by the cable system. Two channels are unavailable for use for technical reasons, such as co-channel interference. The remaining four channels are available, but not in use. Channel converters capable of handling more than 12 nonpay channels are in place in subscribers' homes. The system also supplies allband FM service. (If the system carries selected radio, rather than allband, the number of AM and FM stations is shown.

(8) TV stations carried by the system, including for each: call letters, station's city of license, broadcast channel, cable channel and affiliation (independent and ETV stations and stations that program in a foreign language are also indicated). If the cable channel designation is not available or not applicable (due to set-top converter design, for example), "na" is used. If the station is not picked off the air but brought in by common carrier microwave, it is indicated by "cc"; if by private CARS (community antenna relay service), it is shown by "p." The hypothetical Pan-State system carries 12 TV stations, but only three examples are given:

WOF-TV—licensed in Springfield, broadcasts over the air on channel 2, carried on cable channel 2, an ABC affiliate.

KQSL—UHF channel 20, carried on channel 3, independent, brought in by CARS.

CNTV—from Canada, channel 5 carried on cable channel H, programing in French, a CBC affiliate, brought in by common carrier.

(9) Common carrier microwave company (shown for systems that use the service).

(10) Pay cable. Where a cable system provides pay cable service, a solid square (■) highlights the pertinent information: the channel on which pay programing is carried, the program supplier, type of programing and hours per week offered. Data also includes total pay subscribers (figures are estimated for nonreporting systems), number of homes to which pay service is available and monthly subscriber cost above that charged for regular cable service.

(11) Automated origination. Cable channel B carries a news ticker around the clock; channel C carries time and weather, with FM station WQSL as background music, for 105 hours per week.

(12) Access channels. In larger markets the FCC requires that channels be available for programing by persons other than the cable operator. Channels are assigned to the general public, educational institutions and local government; Channels may also be leased by private parties. The sample listing shows the cable channels and hours of programing per week for each function.

(13) Other origination. Includes nonautomated, nonaccess programing, such as local live, video tape, and film; CATV network; round-the-clock movies. The listing shows channel designation and hours per week.

(14) System accepts advertising (on local origination or automated channels), with yearly revenue shown.

(15) Other services offered by the system. "Two-way capability" indicates the distribution system is equipped to handle subscriber-to-headend signals. Special radio services (distant imported signals, shortwave, etc) are also shown.

(16) Ownership. If a multiple system operator (MSO) owns the system in part or in whole, reference is made to the MSO directory which is on page G-347 of this section, lists the particulars for persons and companies with interest in three or more cable operations. (Canadian MSO's are listed in the following directory.). Attorneys and headquarters addresses and other interests may appear here, rather than under the individual system's listings. If a cable owner has broadcast interests, reference is made to the "Broadcasters in Cable" directory which is in Section A of this book.
